ABSTRACT

A computer program product including program code, when executed on a computer, tracks the time spent by a user working with the computer for different projects. The program code is arranged to provide a plurality of virtual desktops which are assignable to different projects and switchable by the user, and to track the time spent by the user working on the different desktops, thereby tracking the time spent on the projects to which the respective desktops are assigned.